PERIPATETIC PHILOSOPHERS OF THIS MANY-SIDED TOWN

The Boy of Twelve Patroonizes a Woman Philosopher.

A Torrent of Twenty Years' Bitterness Flowed Forth.

Modern Street Philosophers and the Philosophical Attitudes Would Meet on a Common Footing.

Neighborhoods Where the Curdstone Lecturer Holds Sway and an Ancient Athenian Would Feel at Home in a Moment.

There is a philosophical atmosphere about the many-sided town of New York. One may find it in the corners of the streets, in the parks, and even in the subways. The philosophers are not limited to a certain age group or social status. They can be found in every walk of life, from the young boy to the elderly man.

There are neighborhoods where the curdstone lecturers hold sway, and an ancient Athenian would feel at home in a moment. The streets are filled with philosophical attitudes. Some are modern, others are ancient. They all contribute to the unique atmosphere of the town.

In one such neighborhood, a boy of twelve is seen patroonizing a woman philosopher. He is interested in her ideas and thoughts, and she is happy to share them with him. This is a testament to the open-mindedness and curiosity that pervades the town.

Another scene is depicted where a woman is seen reading a book and discussing its contents with a group of people. The atmosphere is intellectual and stimulating, and everyone is engaged in deep conversation.

The town is a place where people come together to discuss and share their philosophical beliefs. It is a place where the old and the young, the rich and the poor, can all find a place to belong and express their ideas. This is what makes it a truly unique and diverse place to live.

The New York Times
Copyright © The New York Times