Every Day the City's Chief Executive Goes from His Home to His Office Afoot—A Vigorous Advocate of Fresh Air and Exercise.

By EDWIN WILDMAN.

On the steps of City Hall After the Walk.

A MORNING WALK AND TALK WITH MAYOR GAYNOR

The Mayor is a walking ambassador of health. At the top of the steps at the rear of City Hall, a robed and white-robed Eighth Avenue, while through the heat of Brooklyn and across the Bridge straight to City Hall. At the end of his work—say 8:30 to 9:30 A.M. he takes the walk, and then is ready for the work of the day. He is never short of exercise, for he usually walks—often with some of his friends. He has a walk every day, and in the summer he walks longer than in the winter.

The Mayor is a large, robust man, with a broad chest and broad shoulders. His hair is black and his eyes are gray. He has a strong, keen look, and a pleasant smile. He is always pleasant, and never cross.

The Mayor is a great walker, and he always walks a long way. He has walked from City Hall to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Brooklyn Bridge to Ellis Island, and back, in one day. He has walked from Ellis Island to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Brooklyn Bridge to the Manhattan Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Manhattan Bridge to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day.

The Mayor is a great walker, and he always walks a long way. He has walked from City Hall to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Brooklyn Bridge to Ellis Island, and back, in one day. He has walked from Ellis Island to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Brooklyn Bridge to the Manhattan Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Manhattan Bridge to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day.

The Mayor is a great walker, and he always walks a long way. He has walked from City Hall to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Brooklyn Bridge to Ellis Island, and back, in one day. He has walked from Ellis Island to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Brooklyn Bridge to the Manhattan Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Manhattan Bridge to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day.

The Mayor is a great walker, and he always walks a long way. He has walked from City Hall to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Brooklyn Bridge to Ellis Island, and back, in one day. He has walked from Ellis Island to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Brooklyn Bridge to the Manhattan Bridge, and back, in one day. He has walked from the Manhattan Bridge to the Brooklyn Bridge, and back, in one day.