A Rose Pays for a Church, a Clover Blossom for a School, Fish for a Clubhouse and Flags for Great Ducal Estates.

This custom had its origin in the time of the founder of the place, Baron Henry William Stiegel, of Silhovsch, Germany, who was a founder of the Church in 1910.

The consideration exacted was an annuity of $100, and the money was to go to the Church. It was to be put away in a bank, and the interest not to be used for any other purpose than for the Church.

The local paper reported that the first big real estate speculator in Berlin was D.J. Shelley, of York, Penn. Since that time the town has been annually
paid to some descendant of the Baron.

A has been given upon occasion of the annual meeting of the Church.

The rental of the land was $100 per year, and the money was to be used for
the Church. It was to be put away in a
bank, and the interest not to be used for
any other purpose than for the Church.

The local paper reported that the first
big real estate speculator in Berlin
was D.J. Shelley, of York, Penn. Since
that time the town has been annually
paid to some descendant of the Baron.

A has been given upon occasion of the
annual meeting of the Church.

The rental of the land was $100 per
year, and the money was to be used for
the Church. It was to be put away in a
bank, and the interest not to be used for
any other purpose than for the Church.

The local paper reported that the first
big real estate speculator in Berlin
was D.J. Shelley, of York, Penn. Since
that time the town has been annually
paid to some descendant of the Baron.

A has been given upon occasion of the
annual meeting of the Church.

The rental of the land was $100 per
year, and the money was to be used for
the Church. It was to be put away in a
bank, and the interest not to be used for
any other purpose than for the Church.

The local paper reported that the first
big real estate speculator in Berlin
was D.J. Shelley, of York, Penn. Since
that time the town has been annually
paid to some descendant of the Baron.

A has been given upon occasion of the
annual meeting of the Church.

The rental of the land was $100 per
year, and the money was to be used for
the Church. It was to be put away in a
bank, and the interest not to be used for
any other purpose than for the Church.

The local paper reported that the first
big real estate speculator in Berlin
was D.J. Shelley, of York, Penn. Since
that time the town has been annually
paid to some descendant of the Baron.

A has been given upon occasion of the
annual meeting of the Church.

The rental of the land was $100 per
year, and the money was to be used for
the Church. It was to be put away in a
bank, and the interest not to be used for
any other purpose than for the Church.