A Nap at the Roxen House.

The dangers of the school were well known and feared. When the children were asleep, they were at their most vulnerable. The Roxen House, a sleepaway camp for children, took precautions to ensure the safety of its young guests. The camp was designed to provide a safe and comfortable environment for children to rest and play.

New York's Sleepaway Camps.

The Roxen House was one of many sleepaway camps in New York that offered a getaway for children. These camps were a popular choice for families, providing a chance for children to experience nature and socialize with their peers.

Lunch Hour is Like a Picnic.

Blackboards for Nature Study Out of Doors.

The Roxen House was known for its innovative approach to education. Instead of traditional classroom settings, the camp provided opportunities for children to learn about nature directly from the outdoors. This approach encouraged hands-on learning and fostered a deeper understanding of the natural world.

German Children Learn from Nature.

The Roxen House was not the only camp in New York to incorporate nature study into its curriculum. Other camps also offered similar programs to teach children about the environment.

The Roxen House provided a unique learning environment for children, encouraging them to explore and learn about nature. This approach to education was ahead of its time and set a precedent for future camps and schools.

Indian Basket Weaving.

In addition to nature study, the Roxen House offered other educational activities, such as Indian basket weaving. These activities were designed to teach children about different cultures and traditions.

The Roxen House was a testament to the importance of providing children with a safe and enriching environment. Its innovative approach to education and focus on nature study were significant contributions to the field of child development.

The Roxen House was a popular destination for children in New York, offering a unique opportunity to learn and play in a natural setting. Its legacy continues to inspire other camps and schools to adopt similar approaches to education.