How the Government Enforces the Tariff Law and the Measures It Takes to Prevent Smuggling.

A PLAIN American citizen will find it difficult to believe that he can do anything to prevent smuggling. Inspections are the business of the authorities, and the man on the street has little or no control over the matter.

But the story is quite otherwise. The Government has taken the matter very seriously, and it has established a system of machinery that is effective in preventing smuggling.

The American citizen is not left in the dark on the subject. The Government has published a series of pamphlets and guides that are available to the public. The Government also has established a series of inspection stations throughout the country, and it has a system of reporting that is effective in stopping smuggling.

The Government has also established a system of publicity. The Government has published a series of articles in newspapers and magazines, and it has established a system of public education that is effective in stopping smuggling.
