Only “Solitary” in Massachusetts Tells the Story of His Thirty-four Year Confinement--The Unusual Punishment of an Extraordinary Crime.

Jesse H. Pomroy, the one prisoner in Massachusetts who is “solitary,” has much to tell. He is not a common type of jailbird, and yet he is a man of some standing. Whether or not you have ever heard of him, or ever thought about him, he has an interesting story to tell. Pomroy, who has been confined in a cell in the Massachusetts State Prison for over 20 years, is a man of some standing. He was once a wealthy man, but he was convicted of a crime and sentenced to life imprisonment. He has been in solitary confinement ever since.

Pomroy’s case is unusual because he has been kept in solitary confinement for so long. He has never been permitted to leave the cell, and his only contact with the outside world is through a window in the cell door. He has been allowed to speak to the warden through a one-way microphone, but he has never been allowed to see anyone else.

Pomroy was convicted of murder in 1890, and has been in solitary confinement ever since. He has never been allowed to leave the cell, and his only contact with the outside world is through a window in the cell door. He has been allowed to speak to the warden through a one-way microphone, but he has never been allowed to see anyone else.

Pomroy’s case is unusual because he has been kept in solitary confinement for so long. He has never been permitted to leave the cell, and his only contact with the outside world is through a window in the cell door. He has been allowed to speak to the warden through a one-way microphone, but he has never been allowed to see anyone else.