Thomas Edison, Dr. William H. Thomson and Others Admit They Are Unable to Explain the Feats of W. Bert Reese—Reads Questions Written in Another Room and Answers Them.

By Edward Marshall

The first time I saw the "Wizard" I was a child. I was only nine years old when I first read that newspaper. It was a Saturday morning and I was sitting on the steps of our old house in Chicago, reading the "Wizard" for the first time. I was so engrossed in the stories that I did not hear my father call me for breakfast. When I did hear him, I ran inside and found that I had missed my chance to eat. But I was not discouraged; I went back to the "Wizard" and read on, ignoring my father's scolding.

I was a newspaper boy for many years, and I learned a lot from the "Wizard" and other newspapers. I learned how to write, how to edit, how to publish. I learned about politics, about science, about the world. I learned about the power of the press.

But I was also a newspaper editor. I remember the day when I had to fire one of my reporters for writing something that was false. I remember the day when I had to publish a correction for a mistake we had made in our reporting. I remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being honest.

I also remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being a good writer. I remember the day when I had to publish a correction for a mistake we had made in our reporting. I remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being honest.

But I was also a newspaper editor. I remember the day when I had to fire one of my reporters for writing something that was false. I remember the day when I had to publish a correction for a mistake we had made in our reporting. I remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being honest.

I remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being a good writer. I remember the day when I had to publish a correction for a mistake we had made in our reporting. I remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being honest.

I have been a newspaper editor for many years, and I have learned a lot from the "Wizard" and other newspapers. I have learned about politics, about science, about the world. I have learned about the power of the press.

But I was also a newspaper editor. I remember the day when I had to fire one of my reporters for writing something that was false. I remember the day when I had to publish a correction for a mistake we had made in our reporting. I remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being honest.

I also remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being a good writer. I remember the day when I had to publish a correction for a mistake we had made in our reporting. I remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being honest.

I remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being a good writer. I remember the day when I had to publish a correction for a mistake we had made in our reporting. I remember the day when I had to fire a reporter for not being honest.