Committee of Scientists Will Make Special Tests of His Powers—How Somewhat Similar Performances Are Done.

There are some queer things that people say about Mr. Reese and his mind reading powers. Some say he has no mind reading powers. Others say he has none; but when you see him in action, you can see for yourself. Not to mention his ability to do mental arithmetic, to write in cipher, and to name the cities of the world. Thus, he has no mind reading powers, for if you ask him to name the cities of the world, he will do so, and it is evident that he has no mind reading powers. How much Reese's work can be explained is a matter of conjecture. The ordinary trick of substitution is worked.

The "clown" takes an ordinary piece of paper into his hands before the audience. This is the "clown". He is a trained performer and he is able to perform this trick. He has memorized the contents of the paper and is able to read them without looking at them. The "clown" then takes the piece of paper and reads it aloud. The audience is amazed at the trick and is even more amazed when the "clown" reads the contents of the paper without looking at it.

There is another simple method of so-called mind reading. This method is based on substitution. The "clown" takes a piece of paper and writes on it. He then puts the paper in his pocket and goes off stage. The audience is amazed at the trick and is even more amazed when the "clown" reads the contents of the paper without looking at it.

ATTENTION AT EXPLANATION.

Based on Substitution or a Confidante.

"Not my Way," says Reese.

To a reading of what is written on the paper, which is held by Mr. Reese, for the people in the audience, his mind reading powers are employed. The audience is amazed at the trick and is even more amazed when the "clown" reads the contents of the paper without looking at it.