Baltimore Tries Drastic Plan of Race Segregation

Strange Situation Which Led the Oriole City to Adopt the Most Pronounced "Jim Crow" Measure on Record.

The Oriole city of Baltimore, Md., has adopted the most pronounced "Jim Crow" measure on record. The City Council has passed the city's segregation ordinance, which provides for the exclusion of Negroes from public places, coaches, buggies, and other conveyances, and for the separation of the races in all public places and conveyances.

The ordinance, which was introduced by Mayor R. H. Mahaffey, provides for the exclusion of Negroes from public places, coaches, buggies, and other conveyances, and for the separation of the races in all public places and conveyances.

The ordinance was introduced by Mayor R. H. Mahaffey, who stated that it was necessary to prevent the recurrence of the trouble that occurred last month, when Negroes were permitted to ride in the city cars.

The ordinance was passed by the City Council on the 25th of last month, and was signed by the Mayor. It takes effect on the 1st of next month.

The ordinance provides that all persons shall be subject to the laws of the State of Maryland, and that all persons shall be held to be citizens of the United States and of the State of Maryland, and that all persons shall be entitled to the privileges and immunities of the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the State of Maryland. It also provides that all persons shall be entitled to the protection of the police and shall be subject to the laws of the State of Maryland.
