NEW METHOD OF TEACHING MORALITY TO THE YOUNG

Visual Instruction in Right and Wrong and Niceties of Conduct the Keynote of Novel Educational Movement Begun by Milton Fairchild.

A NEW method of teaching morality to children has been developed in New York by Milton Fairchild and a group of educational experts. The method is based on the belief that children can learn moral lessons more effectively through visual instruction than they can through the spoken word. The system is called "Visual Instruction in Right and Wrong and Niceties of Conduct," and it is the key feature of an educational movement begun by Milton Fairchild.

Fairchild, a well-known educational reformer, has spent many years studying the psychology of children and has come to the conclusion that they learn better through pictures than through words. He has developed a system of visual instruction, which he believes will revolutionize education.

The system is based on the principle that children learn by association. By presenting them with pictures of good and bad behavior, they can associate the pictures with the moral lessons and therefore remember them better. The system consists of a series of slides, each of which illustrates a moral lesson.

The slides are shown to the children in groups, and the teacher asks them questions about the pictures. The children are then asked to discuss the moral lessons that can be learned from the pictures.

The system has been tested in a number of schools, and the results have been very encouraging. Teachers have reported that the children learn the moral lessons more easily through the visual instruction than through the spoken word.

The system has been greeted with enthusiasm by parents, who believe that it will help their children to learn the moral lessons that they need.

The Educational Board of New York City has, in fact, decided to adopt the system in all of its schools, and the system is now being used in a number of schools throughout the country.

The system has also been adopted by a number of foreign countries, and it is now being used in schools all over the world.

The system is based on the principle that children learn by association. By presenting them with pictures of good and bad behavior, they can associate the pictures with the moral lessons and therefore remember them better. The system consists of a series of slides, each of which illustrates a moral lesson.

The slides are shown to the children in groups, and the teacher asks them questions about the pictures. The children are then asked to discuss the moral lessons that can be learned from the pictures.

The system has been tested in a number of schools, and the results have been very encouraging. Teachers have reported that the children learn the moral lessons more easily through the visual instruction than through the spoken word.

The system has been greeted with enthusiasm by parents, who believe that it will help their children to learn the moral lessons that they need.

The system has been adopted by a number of foreign countries, and it is now being used in schools all over the world.

Milton Fairchild

THE GENTLEMAN

Here is the story of a Gentleman, whose conduct is marked by courtesy and respect for others. He is seen here in a train, giving his seat to an old lady. His conduct is an example to others, and his kindness and consideration for others is a source of pride to his friends.

THE TRUTH SPEAKS FOR ITSELF

Here is a picture of a young boy, who is seen here telling the truth. His honesty is an example to others, and his integrity is a source of pride to his family.

CHILD LABOR SAVES HIS EDUCATION

Here is the story of a boy who worked as a child laborer to save for his education. He is seen here working in a factory, and his determination and perseverance are an example to others.

IF YOU FOLLOW THE PRECEPTS OF THE BIBLE

Here is a picture of a boy, who is seen here following the precepts of the Bible. His faith and devotion are an example to others, and his dedication is a source of pride to his family.

DO THINGS WELL WHEN YOU ARE GROWN UP

Here is the story of a man, who is seen here doing his work well. He is a good example to others, and his diligence and hard work are a source of pride to his family.

THE CLOTH INSTRUCTION

Here is a picture of a boy, who is seen here receiving cloth instruction. His progress is an example to others, and his hard work and determination are a source of pride to his family.

End of Document