A Mysterious Expedition, Apparently Not Composed of Archaeologists, hunts Strange Treasure Under the Mosque of Omar, Sets the Moslems in a Ferment, and May Cause Diplomatic Incident.

The report from Jerusalem states that an exploring party has been unable to dig a tun under the Mosque of Omar and that there appear to be several stories of ancient tombs beneath the structure. It is reported that the site is being examined by a number of men who are engaged in digging for treasure. The report also states that there have been several incidents in which the Moslem authorities have attempted to prevent the digging, leading to a tense situation.

The report notes that the digging has been going on for several weeks, and that the group has not been able to locate any significant findings. However, the Moslems have been upset by the presence of the group, and there have been several incidents of violence. The report also notes that the digging has been financed by a wealthy individual, who has promised a large reward for any treasure that is found.

The situation is complex, as the Moslem authorities have been attempting to prevent the digging, while the group continues to dig despite the opposition. The report notes that the situation could lead to a diplomatic incident, as the Moslem authorities have threatened to file a complaint with the international community if the digging continues.

The report concludes by noting that the situation is still evolving, and that the outcome is uncertain. However, it is clear that the digging has led to a tense situation, and that the Moslem authorities are determined to prevent any further digging.
