A FEW WEEKS ago the newspapers published the death of Capt. C. W. Lott, of the U. S. Navy. His death was mourned by his friends and shipmates as an irreparable loss. Lott had made many friends in his career, and his passing was universally regretted. It is said that he was a very brave and generous man, and that he was always ready to help those in need.

A few days ago the New York Times published an article about the adventures of a young man named George B. Boynton. Boynton was a New Yorker who had made a name for himself in the world of adventure and exploration. He had traveled to many countries and had become known for his courage and determination.

Boynton's latest adventure took him to South America, where he encountered many dangers and obstacles. He faced treacherous terrain, fierce animals, and hostile native tribes. But Boynton was undeterred, and he continued on his journey with unwavering determination.

Despite the challenges he faced, Boynton was able to complete his mission and return home safely. His story has been documented by the New York Times, and it is a testament to his courage and perseverance.Boynton is a man who never gives up, and his story is an inspiration to all who read it.