Intricate System of Espionage by Which the Government Protects the Gullible Public from Postal Crooks the Country Over.

I n one of the back rooms of the New Post Office Building in Philadelphia, is a little mysterious password and a few bright-eyed men who have wire tap on the telegraph wires and listen to the conversation of the people who use them. And, believe it or not, they do it for the benefit of the Government.

These men are the agents of the Post Office Department, and they have been instructed to keep a watchful eye on all telegraph wires in the United States, and to report any suspicious conversations that may be heard. When they discover something that they think is suspicious, they report it to the Government, and the Government takes care of the matter.

These men work in a room that is called the "Password Room," and they have a special key that they use to enter the room. They have a special password that they use to communicate with each other. They have a special code that they use to send messages to each other.

These men are the Post Office Department's special agents, and they work 24 hours a day to keep the country safe from postal crooks. They are the eyes and ears of the Government, and they are the protectors of the gullible public.

These men, these special agents of the Post Office Department, are the protectors of the country. They are the protectors of the gullible public. They are the protectors of the United States. They are the protectors of the Constitution.

These men are the Post Office Department's special agents, and they work 24 hours a day to keep the country safe from postal crooks. They are the eyes and ears of the Government, and they are the protectors of the gullible public.

These men, these special agents of the Post Office Department, are the protectors of the country. They are the protectors of the gullible public. They are the protectors of the United States. They are the protectors of the Constitution.

These men are the Post Office Department's special agents, and they work 24 hours a day to keep the country safe from postal crooks. They are the eyes and ears of the Government, and they are the protectors of the gullible public.

These men, these special agents of the Post Office Department, are the protectors of the country. They are the protectors of the gullible public. They are the protectors of the United States. They are the protectors of the Constitution.