Shoe manufacturers don't make small-sized shoes for women any more. They say women's feet have become the size of men's feet in the last fifteen or twenty years. Small feet, of course, are only in keeping with large waists, and a woman twenty years ago was 2 or 2½ sizes larger than she is today. It is said that there are no sizes for women's shoes under 5½ ever sold in the large retail shoes of the best houses. The reason for this is that the average size of shoes has increased considerably.

It was also reported that many firms made women's shoes in different sizes, but that was before the days of the equalitarian spirit that has swept over the country. Women, it was said, would not accept this. They had been told that their feet were too small to make them uncomfortable and that a woman with a small foot was a misshapen creature. But now they were told that they could have shoes that were just as comfortable as those of men and that they could wear them with as much pride.

Women began to demand shoes that were not only comfortable but also fashionable. They wanted shoes that were not only practical but also stylish.
