FAMOUS WORKS OF ART THAT HAVE BEEN STOLEN

Disappearance of the "Mona Lisa" from the Louvre Climax of Long Series of Thefts.

WILLIAM C. FREDERICK, a man who has been operating under a false name as a dealer in art, was arrested recently in Paris by the police. He was charged with the theft of the "Mona Lisa," a famous painting by Leonardo da Vinci, which was stolen from the Louvre Museum in Paris in 1911.

The painting, which is thought to be worth several million dollars, was one of the most valuable works of art in the world. It was stolen in broad daylight, and the culprit was never caught.

The painting was later found in a French village, and the thief was identified as a man named Jacques Goujon. He was tried and convicted in 1912 and sentenced to life imprisonment.

The Mona Lisa was returned to the Louvre in 1912, and the thief was released from prison in 1925. He is now living in hiding in France, and no one knows where he is.

The theft of the "Mona Lisa" was one of the most sensational art heists in history, and it remains a mystery to this day.
