How Chief Willie's Secret Service Men Drew a Net Around the Leaders of the Most Dangerous Band of Foreign Criminals Ever Known in This Country.

The spirit of the great policeman, the 16-foot American, who laid the foundation of the Brooklyn police force and made it what it is today, lived on in the men whose names you will read today. The story of the recent capture of the leaders of the Black Hand, a band of foreign criminals who have been terrorizing the United States for many years, was told by Chief Willie, the head of the Secret Service Department of the New York Police Department.

Chief Willie, whose full name is Salvatore Colaci, was born in Italy and came to this country when he was twelve years old. He started work as a boy in the streets of New York, and rose to become one of the most successful and respected men in the city. He is now a member of the Board of Aldermen, and was recently elected mayor of the city.

The capture of the Black Hand was the result of a long and bitter struggle. The band of criminals had been terrorizing the United States for many years, and had carried out many crimes, both in this country and abroad. They were known to be a dangerous and powerful organization, and the police had been working hard to catch them.

The police finally succeeded in tracing the band to their hiding place, and a great battle ensued. The band fought bravely, but they were no match for the police. After a long and bitter struggle, the band was finally defeated, and the police were able to arrest many of its members.

Chief Willie was instrumental in the capture of the band. He had been working on the case for many months, and had gathered a great deal of information about the band's activities. He was able to use this information to help the police in their search.

The capture of the Black Hand is a great victory for the police, and a great victory for the people of this country. It is a lesson to those who would dare to commit crimes in this country, and it is a lesson to those who would dare to think of doing so.

The people of this country are proud of their police, and they are proud of their chief. Chief Willie is a true American, and he deserves the respect and admiration of all.
