Plans for Big Operations Made.

SCHERER is the improvement of the east end of New York Avenue in Times Square going on. In that corner of the affairs of the Times Square we can see a number of plans for changes, which will completely surround the appearance of the neighborhood. The present block of Forty-second Street and Broadway, will soon give way to a block of office buildings. The design for the block has been made and shown on this page.

Building operations, now in Forty-second Street and one in Forty-eighth, The designs have not been made for them, and no work that is in progress, but that is to be the location.

Just such of this, between Forty-second and Forty-seventh Streets, will be the new theater building. On the other hand, a block in Forty-seventh Street and Forty-eighth is another new building to be undertaken. One of these is a combination theater and office building, to be built by Fleet Lines.

This will be on the Forty-eighth Street end of the block and will occupy half of it. On the southern end of the block will be another new theater building. The site has been determined, and the plans to be made by Walter F. Schermer.

On the north side of Forty-ninth Street, just west of Seventeenth Avenue, will be the William S. Brandy's new theater. Further north and west will be the biulding of the Union Club of New York. These two buildings and the theater on Forty-second Street and Broadway will drive the current designs into new channels.

This new movement north of Times Square has as its planner the Columbus Theatre building at Forty-second Street and Seventeenth Avenue. With the Temple building and the Ohio Theater building, it is evident that a new era in the theater business is about to be ushered in.
